When the soul is starved or free: Impotence and Power in society begins at the home gate. Both have many forms; sexual and social; of dreams becoming reality, or of failing to do so. Most individual experiences unfold between the two poles of impotence and power, and more often than not, the two poles are colored with the color of sex. The difference is not easy to sort out. Without a scientific recognition of the principles involved, positions are uncertain, fear fills the void. The problem with uncertainties is that friends and even professionals rarely stand on higher ground to be qualified to serve as guides. They offer advise, while they are explorers themselves. Consequently, the biggest strides are made individually alone at the leading edge, primarily by one s honesty with oneself. That s also where the biggest surprises are encountered. The story presented here is a love story of a struggle under stress to follow the right path in a new landscape that no one has traveled before or had dared to do so. The story begins on a beach in North Carolina, then moves on to Pittsburgh and Washington DC, and from there to Russia on a diplomatic mission. It is centred on love, marriage, and the dimension of sex standing in the background, intertwined with hopes and dreams. The intertwining of impotence and power even draws Woodstock Concert and the Vietnam War into the foreground in the end. The major scene unfolds in Russia, during a fictional, international peace conference organized by the youth of the world, convened in a city on the Black Sea. The story itself is a composite of scenes that are...
